It was terribly hot, and the Jedge was tired. The gaping crowd stood around him, shutting off every bit of fresh air; the odor from the pen savored of that which has long been unfamiliar with soap and water, and altogether it was a trying day. He chewed savagely and spat yoluminously. Even the reporters were tired and disgrunted. The smell of the grass was wafted through the windows, is a bit of green could be seen, and the Jedge and the reporters, alone in their virtuousness, thought of the sparkling river, running over yellow sand, and the fish waiting to be caught.

The prisoners were haled before the bar to receive their deserts and a foretaste of that which is yet to come unless they mend their ways and that with despatch. Robert Mosby and Aubrey Mason, two colored brethren, had been seduced with the charms of chance; otherwise, had played with the checkered dice. Two unkind officers, Andrews and Aores, had surreptitiously run in on them when they were deep in the game, and nabed five cents from the table. Robert and Abrey were requested for two each. Fred Smith, colored, raised a row of car 311 of the Broad and Main cars, and he was soaked for $10.

The case of J. W. Jones, the colored mail carrier, who was arrested on a sireet car last Saturday was dismissed. The commission met at 11 o'clock, and Mr. Thom continued his argument commenced on the previous afternoon, involving the extent to which the commission to the previous afternoon, in roviving the extent to which the commission to rule on any point involved, but they desired the body to be in possession of their respective views.

When Mr. Green, at 11:15, resumed his testimony, he explained, at Mr. Braxton's sugrestion, what was meant by a milling in transit rate.

He-said this was an arrangement by which grain was taken to mills along his line on a local rate, and when ground rebilled as flour from the mill to the point of destination.

Witness said his road had similar arrangements with reference to peanuts and certain classes of lumber. These peouliar and intricate questions, relating to special rates on peanuts, lumber and grain, were closely examilied into, and when the witness explained how and why they are made, Mr. Braxton was very diligent and pressing in pursuing his inquiry along this line.

Witness said he never knowingly and intentionally reduced rates below the point of remuneration. "How can a railroad encourage and build up business along its lines unless it reduces rates for other than reasons of competition?" was asked, and the witness repeated, as he has often done before, that the rates of his company being already reasonhe has often done before, that the rate

The subject under advisement having all kinds of ramifications, Mr. Braxton seemed to have no trouble in propounding new questions with much rapidity, although necessarily others akin to them had been frequently asked.

Mr. Braxton kept up his line of questioning as to rate making until nearly lunch hour, and then Commissioner Stuart examined the witness for some time along the same lines.

Mr. Green resumed his testimony at the afternoon session, and was questioned by Mr. Braxton.

On the question of insurance, witness said the majority of shipments are now made at the risk of the owner.

Mr. Braxton wished to know if 20 per cent. was not a heavy insurance charge, but the witness could not agree with him.

Lost laughter, and the whistled tunes of boyhood's mouth of crescent runes. That rounded through long afternoons. To serending plenilunes—
Then starlight fell so mistly. That, peering up from bended knee, I dreamed 'twas bridal drapery, Snowed over Used-to-bo. O land of love and dreamy thoughts.
And shining fields and shady spots.
Of coolest, greenest grassy plots.
Embossed with wild forget-me-nots—
And all ye blooms that cunningly
Lift your faces up to me,
Out of the past, I kiss in thee
The lips of Used-to-be.

And love ye all with wet eyes,
Turned glimmering on the skies,
By blessing like your perfumes rise,
Till o'er my soul a silence lies
Sweeter than any song to me—
Sweeter than its melody,
Or its sweet echo, yea, all three—
My dreams of Used-to-be,
